

Day 7

Listening to the lecture made me think about how I can really begin to create decent applications. It made me think on how new applications were made in the past and how when new things are created it's all about going on a limb and just trying everything out until it works. Being creative with the resources you have and just knowing you don't know the right answer.

Messing around with React definitely took a lot of researching and playing around with the code. At first it took me a while just to get anything to print out and I wasn't sure what I was doing wrong. But after looking at the blog and doing some Googling around, I figured out that it was all due to the order I had placed the variables in. I also understand the Render and how it works and being able to display things on the page.
